Automate Your Photoshop Workflow Photoshop has features available to allow you to quickly create multiple versions of an image. You can edit the same image as many times as you want, save different versions of the image, and even build a Photoshop file into a Web page as it is being processed.

Photoshop has a so-called "action" feature that allows you to create a recurring workflow so that you don't have to do it manually each time. For example, if you add a watermark to an image, you can use a Photoshop action to add the watermark to each image that goes out the door. You can even automate the watermarking process so that Photoshop automatically works in a loop for a certain number of images and then stops. Figure 11-17 shows an example of a set of watermarked images that were made with the same Photoshop action. With a Photoshop action, you don't have to go to work, do the image editing, print out the images and then staple them in a binder, and then organize them in a folder. It's just the first step of all these steps. Photoshop has a fantastic library of actions that you can use to automate just about any image manipulation you need to do. The one that I use in my Photoshop workflow is one that I found on the Web at ```. It's a very helpful set of Photoshop actions that should be a part of everyone's arsenal. Take a look at the post for more details. Figure 11-17: You can automate your Photoshop image creation process to save time and make your workflow more efficient. * * * # The "Interesting Things to Know" section Just because Photoshop is a

area. You can use different corners as handles for a different edge. If you want to create a square crop, you can use the Magnify Tool (at the bottom right) and drag the corners of the desired size. For a larger box, just press the Shift key while dragging. The Crop Tool can also be used to crop out part of an image. Simply press Ctrl + J to make a selection. If you are not happy with the selection, just press Ctrl + D to deselect it. If you don't want to crop the image, use the Rectangular marquee tool (main tool) to make any selection. Here is a tutorial video: Red Eye Removal Red eye is the result of a camera reflection and will not be present in every image. The red eye tool helps to remove the red color on the eye. The tool is located at the top right of the image. You can adjust its size and position. You can remove the red eye either by selecting the problem eye and pressing Delete or by using one of the adjustment brushes. Adjustment Brush Adjustment Brush helps to enhance the image's colors. There are several adjustment brush presets available: Your Images Picture Style B&W Black & White Sepia B&W & Sepia Greyscale Black & White & Greyscale You can use any of these brushes to make color adjustments. If you apply too much, you will lose detail in your image. Use moderation. Click the... button at the top right of the brush to customize the amount of tonal shift a681f4349e

Q: Can anyone tell me why I'm getting a SyntaxError: Unexpected identifier error? I'm trying to make a simple jquery call, and for some reason the server doesn't like it. The code is: `$('a').click(function() { $.get("", function(data) { alert(data); }); return false; });` Click me! Can anyone tell me what I'm doing wrong? A: I would assume its not matching the return; Try this: `$('a').click(function() { $.get("", function(data) { alert(data); }); return false; });` Q: How to make infographics for a website? I want to make a portfolio site, that I can present to a client. I wish to use infographics that stand out. I found this site: - is this an easy to use tool or a difficult to learn hard to use tool? Secondly, do I need to understand any programming language to be able to create them? A: If you want professional looking infographics then you would need to be able to understand some graphic design as well. My advice would be to try and use some of the tools online, eg but you might need to spend some time on the basics first. For example if you are keen on this site you will need to be able to: understand how to use html, css and javascript understand how to construct and style
